Our juror this year is Sterling Edwards

One of my specific goals that I set for myself when I jury a show is have an open mind about each and every painting and not allow any prejudice to influence my decisions. It has always been my belief that good art stands on its own merit regardless of the subject, the size, the style, the artist, or the medium

Having painted everything from exacting photo realism to abstract expressionism, I have a developed a good working knowledge of the skill and dedication that goes into each painting, regardless of the style. In making my selections for a show, I make every effort to select an impressive variety of styles and subjects that truly illustrate the endless possibilities of working with watermedia. My process for making my selections is neither scientific nor philosophical. It begins with my first impression when viewing a piece of art followed by an evaluation process. The following are some of the main characteristics and qualities that I look for when making my selections. A strong composition is very high on my list of requirements and a strong balance of values. These are the two elements that I believe act as a solid foundation for a painting. Original and expressive design is something that I find very admirable as well as the creative use of bold or unusual colors. Other important qualities that I might look for in a painting are interesting textures, a pleasing balance of hard and soft edges, and a nice balance of positive and negative space. Of course, the degree of technical proficiency that was employed in painting the piece always rates very high on my list of qualities. I often ask myself when studying a painting, "Would this piece command my attention if it were hanging in a gallery surrounded by dozens of other well executed paintings?"

I know from personal experience that every artist who enters a show is putting their best work before the juror. They believe in themselves and they believe in that particular painting. They trust that the juror will make a fair and honest assessment of their work. We all know, however, that the juror cannot select every entry. My pledge to you is that your painting will receive the same level of consideration as all of the other entries.

Sterling will be conducting a workshop April 20 to 23, 2020 at The First Plymouth Congregational Church
