COLORADO WATERCOLOR SOCIETY

Demo-Palooza a La-La-Palooza! And, more to come...

By Greg Chapleski, Programs Committee

If you were at the February CWS meeting you got an eyeful of creativity that was “charged” with color unique to four of our members. They put it all out there and the results were beyond expectation in every sense of their work. Watermedia was pushed beyond the typical brush, paint and paper. The program at our February meeting - Demo-Palooza – had it all. Those in attendance were exposed to four completely diverse artists with different techniques.

Chuck Danford – demonstrated watercolor on yupo (plastic paper). His technique and control were amazing. He demonstrated how to create very fine detail by letting his colors, water and brush strokes do the talking – charging – lifting – flowing – wetting, all combined to display effects that defy the imagination.

Rita Campbell – demonstrated Encaustic. Beautiful colors in wax and strokes with the hot iron revealed exciting and unexpected results. “One of a kind” - the words she often used as her creativity took form. There’s another word that was used as she did her thing... “Wow!”

Camille Scott – had her samples of Batik on rice paper to show the various steps of her unique skills to get to the beautiful results she creates. Color never looked better.

Judy Patti – demonstrated on scrap matt board or foam core what you can do with watercolor and the smoke from a candle. She called her creativity “5-minute paintings.” Somehow, her paintings seemed like the culmination of years of knowing how to make water, paint and brush speak so colorfully.

NEXT MONTH: The Tuesday, March 19th meeting will be our always popular “Critique.” Because painting with watercolors is an ever-changing process rather than a destination, everyone is encouraged to bring in a recent creation, finished or not, to seek a little direction. Let an expert commend you for your skills and also to give you some helpful hints as to what you might want to consider taking your creation to the next step.

Please, only one piece per member – matting and framing are optional and do not bring it in behind glass – it is hard for everyone to see your creation with the reflections from the lights in the room. Watch for an email blast prior to the meeting that will tell you who will be doing the critiquing.

So mark your calendar and plan to join us at 7pm at The First Plymouth Congregational Church, 3501 S. Colorado Blvd., Englewood, CO. See you then...

The Board in Brief

Bonnie Jones
Corresponding Secretary

President, Marcio Correa, called the Board meeting to order.

CWS will be using the bookkeeping services of Joan Lund. Arleen Brogan-Smith will continue on as Treasurer until a replacement is found.

Minutes from the January meeting were approved.

The Board passed a motion to switch to a new website management system called Wild Apricot. Hopefully, this new system will make our CWS website more efficient and more user friendly.

Kathy Cranmer reported to the Board on her efforts with the SCFD application. It was decided to compile the necessary information during this year for application to the SCFD for next year. The Board thanked Kathy for all of her hard work on this project.

President Elect, Greg Chapleski will begin securing those members to be nominated for Board positions that will be vacated in June.

Terrey Harrod reported on the upcoming Thomas Schaller workshop. Sterling Edwards and Stephen Quiller workshops are filled with a waiting list and Mary Alice Braukman workshop in October has a few openings. Next year, Terrey is planning another workshop with Sterling Edwards as well as planning for Tom Jones and Leslie Franz.

There will be a silent auction of the three paintings completed at last month's paint-a-round at tonight's meeting. Future programs will include a Critique in March, a presentation by Stephen Quiller in April.

CWS awarded five $100 awards at the recent Scholastic Art and Writing Awards. Bonnie Jones and Sharon Rouse juried for the CWS awards and were very impressed with the skills of these high school students.

The Board will postpone the vote on the Bylaws revision until next year.

The CWS roster will be distributed at the General Meeting tonight. Membership Official, Debra Patterson, will have a table set up for collection of dues at the next few meetings. Remember to bring your money for dues and take care of this responsibility quickly and easily in March, April or May!

Members who wish to have get well or sympathy cards sent to members, contact Diane Fechenbach.

Message from the President

Marcio Correa, CWS President

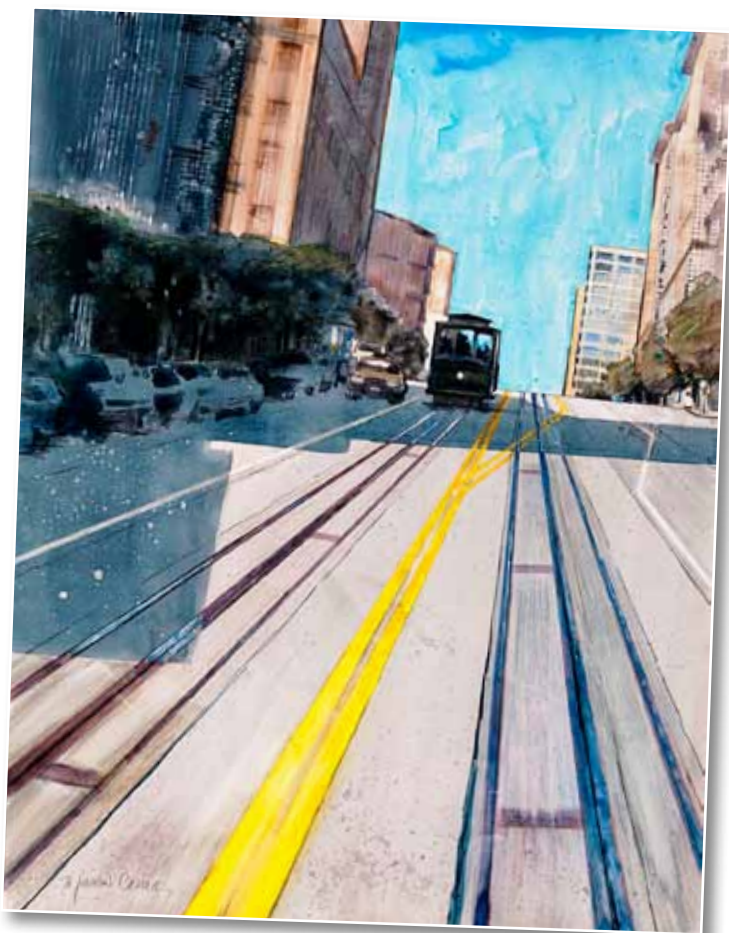

I had the wonderful experience of attending this year's award ceremony of the Scholastic Art and Writing Awards Colorado Region. How encouraging to see so many talented youngsters and their amazing work receive recognition!

The CWS contributes the Young Artist Awards, and I was honored to hand them to five deserving students selected by our jurors Carla Rouse and Bonnie Jones.

Visiting the related exhibit just prior to the ceremony, I was thrilled to view great examples of art that has been only partially intellectualized. The works on the wall have been through the institutional filter of art teachers and jurors, but they still show the rawness and honesty of young hearts and minds. The technical skills were often surprising, but it was the overall evocativeness that stood out—these kids had something to say! Somehow adults forgot to tell these children that they are supposed to be a numbed generation that only stares at screens and texts abbreviated words all day long... their art is busy, bold, brave, and both engaged and engaging.

I was once in a near plane crash, and experienced the bonding with total strangers that results from common tragedy followed by shared elation. Evocative works of art can have that same power to make you feel like you shared in the pain and joy of its production, as if you suddenly know something profoundly intimate about this individual you have not even met. I had this sensation of communion with these artists of so many backgrounds, of another country, another generation. Two examples: One a photo from inside a drainage pipe, with a teenager silhouetted sitting in the entrance, and the light shape of the round opening plus the reflection on the water suggesting the shape of a keyhole; the other the extreme close-up watermedia portrait of a teenage girl looking straight at the viewer. Is the former a representation of the introspection, self-conflict and loneliness that goes with leaving childhood? In the latter, are the roles possibly reversed as it seems it is the artist who is looking up close through the frame of the painting at the viewer—is it this young person's openness and curiosity about the world that is being revealed? Inner truths are often clothed in fantasy and imagination, like the real toads in imaginary gardens mentioned by Gertrude Stein.

These and many other pieces made me stop and wonder, amused or intrigued, at how honest art can touch both the unique in the artist and the universal in all of us, at how what makes us so unique renders us so much alike. Much of our life is traveled in parallel with others, with only glimpses at each other at the frequent intersections, a theme I explored in my painting Parallel Lives... But if, as Joseph Conrad put it, "we live as we dream—alone...", then art is one such rare opportunity we have to open a window into each other's dreams.

Parallel Lives

2013 Scholastic Art Awards: The award goes to...

The Colorado Watercolor Society, represented by Marcio Correa, presented five $100 Emerging Artists awards for achievement in watermedia to five talented middle and high school visual arts students. The winners, selected by CWS jurors Sharon Rouse and Bonnie Jones, were Robert Aldrich, of Arapahoe High School, K.K. Braza, Air Academy 11th grade, Caleigh Daugherty, The Vanguard School 7th grade, Madeline Rohner, Denver School of the Arts 7th grade, and Celia Schreiber, Lakewood High School 12th grade. These awards were a part of the Scholastic Art and Writing Awards, Colorado Region program.

Since the 1920's, The Scholastic Art and Writing Awards has encouraged and rewarded art and creativity in classrooms nationwide. This year in Colorado, over 4500 works of art were submitted and juried to about 500 pieces which were then displayed at the Rocky Mountain College of Art and Design. About 80 of these art works will be displayed at the Denver Art Museum in March. Over $340,000 awards and scholarships were presented at the ceremony held January 14, 2013 at Jefferson High School.

The Colorado Watercolor Society is the only professional arts organization in the state recognizing young artists through its outreach program in this manner. Our congratulations to the winners, and to all the Colorado art teachers for their instruction and inspiration to a bright new generation of artists.

22nd Annual CWS State Watermedia Exhibition Opens

By Janice Hanson and Jan Archuleta, CoChairs

The 22nd Annual CWS State Watermedia Exhibition will open March 2 and run through March 24, 2013 at Foothills Art Center in Golden.

The opening reception will be Friday, March 1st from 6:30-8:30 pm. 92 outstanding paintings, chosen by our juror and workshop instructor Thomas Schaller, will hang in newly renovated galleries. Awards totaling over $4,500 in cash, gift certificates and merchandise will be presented at the reception. Donors of awards not mentioned in the February Collage include Dr. Ph. Martin (Salis International), Linda Doll Denver Seminar Award by its members, and Presidents Award by CWS Presidents, past and present.

We would like to recognize the following volunteers for their enormous help in checking in the paintings for the show: Tom Brown, Noell Custer, Pat Fostvedt, Zona Janssen, Valli McDougale, Cathy Pennak, and Dave Wicks. Sheryl Harrington, Exhibition Coordinator, for Foothills Art Center has also done massive amounts of work in helping to produce this exhibition and she should be recognized as well. Thank you!

We look forward to seeing you at the reception.

It is a show not to be missed.
